SEATO crumbles

4 × 5:

major question in the minds A major question in the minds of delegates to the South East Asia Treaty Organization meeting iffiat opened yesterday in Canteria is whether SEATO is any imager an effective force, and it is not much longer it will continue as such. The U.S. Hattan, Australia, New Zealand, Theisan, and the Philippines are remissented. The other two memrepresented. The other two mem-bers, France and Pakistan, are or attending.

Currently, France is in deep trouble with most countries in the Pacific area for planning nuclear tests in the Pacific, still held up for either technical or political reasons. The U.S. is political reasons. The U.S. is likely to stay away from the Pacific after its troops leave Vietnam. Pakistan has too many troubles of its own to give assistance to other countries in the SEATO area. The real weakness of SEATO since its formation in 1954 has been the failure of other major South East Asia countries to join. SEATO must have some of the stigms of European im-pariatism when its members do not takin de Malaysia, Indo-nesia Burma, Cambodia, Laos and hodia. Moreover, if the Austrains Labour Party wins the election at the end of this year, it will sholish military service and at the first opportunity withdraw Australian ground forces from Malaysia. It will become a passive member.

There has been some confusion in SEATO about an American "understanding" that the aggres-sion against which the organization's members would assist each other was, specifically, Communist aggression, and that the involvement in Vietnam was required by the SEATO under-takings. The Australian Labour Party has always claimed that no such obligation existed.

The official Australian De-fence Review has defined the principal value of SEATO as no more than "the additional conce it has brought to the weaker Asian countries during nearly twenty years, its value as a deterrent and the vehicle which it has provided for security oriented development programmes."

Rich this appears an overstationent. Countries like Thai-iand Leas, Cambodia and Viet-nam and Agrily be said to have benefited from development programmes during the weary years in which they have been devast-tated by a war from which the principal participant, the U.S., is now withdrawing. Australia and New Zeeland withdraw their ground forces some time ago.

But the final blow to any hopes Australia had of imbuing other SEATO delegates with confidence in its sense of obli-gation came from Prime Minster William McMahon nimself during his just-concluded tour of Indonesia and Malaysia. Mc-Mahon said publicly he did not regard the Five Power Treaty as more than an obligation to consult and that there was no real necessity for the agreement. He tried later to modify this statement by saying he regarded the Five Power Treaty with Malaysia, Singapore, New Zea-land and Britain as "of great importance," but he failed to remove the first impression.

The Malaysian Foreign Office made it known unofficially but at top level that it would have be regrets if Australian forces stationed in Malaysia were taken

SAIGON (ANS). AFTER ten years of savage fighting, Hue has not yet been attacked Kontum has not fallen, and the siege of An Loc has been broken by Salgon Government troops, while American bombing and naval bombardment have reduced North Vietnam into a shambles. The American press, which once highly praised North Vietnamese General Vo Nguyen Giap, is now very critical of him South Vietnamese and American officials have become

On the face of it, North Vietnam has falled in its current offensive. But if it is true that it has failed, why has it not called it quits? it has failed why has it not caused it quits? The Saigon authorities, although optimistic, are less so than the Americans. They are relieved that the dissert has befallen South Vietnam.

The results obtained at great pains by the Vietnamese and American authorities in the past four years are disintegrating.

According to a reliable source, 80 per cent of the defence outposts entrusted to regional and militia forces, now exist only on paper.

The disintegration of these posts results from two causes: Victory strategy and the transfer of the Government regular troops to meet the North Vietnam Army (N.V.A.) on fronts north of Saigon.

While the N.V.A. pinned down the best Government troops at An Loc, Kontum, Dat Do (near Vung Tau, formerly Cap Saint Jacques), Binh Dinh, Hue and Quang Tri, the Vietcong without much fanfare, had overrum the posts held by the regional and militia forces in the Delta.

Not strong enough

The latter did not fight because they were not strong enough to do so. But also because there had been an understanding between the two sides to observe peaceful coexistence.

There have been persistent rumours about such 'local arrangements' in the last two years, and these may be the real reason why American officials had been able to send very rosy reports to Washington on the progress of

There have been reports also that the Vietcong leaders had refused to accept "help" from the N.V.A. in the Delta, that there had been discord between the Victoria and Hanoi. This is not surprising because strong regionalism pervades in Vietnam.

Apart from a political softening up of the Delta, there has been an enemy drive towards Saigon. The provinces to the west, southwest and south of Saigon have been under heavy weeks. This coincided with a lessening of pressure on An Loc. The places attacked by the N.V.A., form an arc around Saigon.

For the time being, the N.V.A. cannot hope to penetrate Saigon. But they can immobilize enough government forces in the capital area, as well as in many other cities, to enable them to extend their control of the countryside. This makes sense especially if it is taken together with the prospects of a ceasefire (which may leave the N.V.A. in possession of territory they have occupied) and elections (which they contest with more confidence, having wrecked the pacification

But that would be phase three. For the present, the Saigon authorities believe that the N.V.A. and Vietcong have still to complete phase two - doing a lot more fighting. Will Hanoi resume its tactics of fight-talk uptil the American November elections in the hope of seeing Senator McGovern in the White

The odds are that the murderous bombing the North and the dogged resistance of the A.R.V.N. in the South, plus the pressure from Moscow, and possibly Peking, will produce a peaceful settlement before then, with the Americans making a new proposal or considering a new North Vietnamese proposal in

More interesting is the fact that the Chinese in Cholon (Salgon's Chinatown) have been giving ten to one odds that there would be a ceasefire by this week.

Bomb may have caused air crash which killed 81

SAIGON (AP). - Investigators probing the crash of a Cathay Airways jetliner which killed 81 persons are almost certain that the plane carried a bomb which destroyed it in air.

Sources familiar with the inquiry into the June 15 crash said Sunday all other possibilities have been virtually eliminated, with air collision, weather and any type of military activity ruled out.

"The investigation is concentrating on one strong probability, and that is a bomb exploded the air-craft," one source said. An explosives expert from Britain has joined the investigating team and sources said special attention also is being given to insurance policies written on the passengers.

All of the 71 passengers and 10 crew members were killed when the four-engine Convair 880 crashed in the remote central highlands of South Vietnam, about 320 km. northeast of Saigon, on a flight fire due to the flooding.

Chess match may be stalemated by lighting problem

NEW YORK (AP). — The long-awaited chess match between Russian world champion Boris Spassky sian world champion Boris Spassky and the American challenger, Bobby Fischer, in Reykjavik, Iceland, may be stalemated in a dispute over lighting, Fred Cramer, past president of the U.S. Chess Federation, said Sunday night.

Mr. Cramer, a consulting filumination engineer and a friend of Fischer, said a battle was brewing between Fischer and a television producer who has the rights to televise the 24-game match scheduled to start on July 2.

Speaking to newsmen at Kennedy Airport before boarding a flight to Reykjavik, Mr. Cramer said, "Fischer won't play under anything but fluorescent lighting — it is very important to him." He said that the television contract "in six figures," calls for filming the match in color and that fluorescent lighting does not have "the proper color spectrum for color film."

The unpredictable Fischer was supposed to have left on the same flight with Mr. Cramer but cancelled his reservation at the last min-ute. Mr. Cramer shrugged when asked why Fischer did not show up.

"He makes his own decisions," he said, adding he would report back to Fischer on hotel room accommodations, the amount of noise in the tournament hall, proximity of the audience and light glare. "Everything has to be perfect," he com-

Israel and the West

ELIEZER Livneh, one of Israei's most stimulating thinkers, at home in the traditions of both Judaic and Western civilization, whose interests encompass virtually all that is universal in modern civilization and whose love embraces virtually all that is particular in Jewish civilization, has written an important new book. It is an ambitious effort to analyse the current condition of Jewish and world civilization and their interrelationships. Even those who do not share Livneh's vision or sympathize with his analysis will learn a great deal from this volume.

As far as I can recall Livneh has Jews to cope with the problems of always tended to talk in apocalyptic modern society even within their terms. Since the Six Day War this own framework, and the unwillingtendency has become more pronounc- ness of the non-religious to accomed. For Livneh, world civilization modate themselves to what Livneh and Judaism stand on the brink of finds to be right, just, true and profound changes. The world, with beautiful in the tradition. its inability to control the rate of technological change, is destroying itself and its traditional values. The Jews, now, as always isolated in a hostile world (even as they learn from the world), have the potential to differ, to set an example, to help the world. The Jewish People itself, on the other hand, has entered a period of pronounced change. Even though the past is always present for Jews, and the values of the tradition continue to provide guidelines for life, the present period, which Livneh defines as Shivat Tzion (the Return to Zion), adds a new dimension to Jewish life.

an analysis of this Shivat Trion of modern Zionism. He dates it from the period immediately following Shabtai Zvi. Livnen, therefore. places the aliyot of the 18th and early 19th centuries into a context of Jewish history. They were the outcome, in his opinion, of the post-Shabtai Zvi crisis, and it is this period and not the Emancipation which marks the beginning of the modern Jewish era.

Other factors

Livneh dismisses the influence of other national movements or economic factors in establishing the patterns of modern Zionism. He distinguishes between the mentality of the early religious olim and that of the Biluim and their successors. He sees this as part of separate nationality and are entitled sefat Hanivharim, etc. to demonstrate his thesis by homeland as a sovereign state — historical analysis. Livneh's romantic pastiche of religion, nationalism and humanism bears implications which in the hand of those less sensitive than he are inimical to both religious and humanist values.

It is Livneh's tendency to romanticism and apocalypticism, as much as his own analysis of the contemporary Jewish condition, which leads him to the belief that the contemporary Jewish epoch of Shivat Tzion s only in its first stage. Livneh believes that large numbers of American and Soviet Jews will come to Israel. He sees the American Jewish condition as fraught with enor-In what I found to be the most mous danger. reasons. In a magnificant passage he describes the distrust, fear, and envy which the successful assimilated Jew arouses in the non-Jew. The dual loyalty of American Jews i.e. the very existence of the State of Israel - also arouses real problems and a degree of anti-Semitism. The libertinism associated with technological progress stressing individual sensual experience of the worst sort removes restraints on anti-Semitic manifestations. Finally, with the stress on ethnic particularism in the U.S. today, the assimilation option may be closed to the Jew, Livneh

Implications

In the final analysis, the book is not really about Israel or about Western civilization. It is about Shivat Tzion, which to Livneh marks the current stage of Jewish history and which he feels has universal as well as particularistic implications. Livneh's love for his people and for Zion, however, does not blind him to their short-comings. He is especially harsh on the Yishuv and its leaders for their behaviour during the Holocaust period, but his major fear is that the Jews and Israelis will not have the courage or the knowledge to stand apart from the world, and Western civilization in particular, as the latter experiences decaying values, deca-dence and disintegration.

It seems to me that, on the whole, Mr. Moshe Davan's policies represent as reasonable a step in the direction of selfdetermination as could be expected under the circumstances. The awful pall of smoke and the smell of burning arising from the continuous, indiscriminate bombing, the littered debris of the medical supplies we ourselves unloaded two days before, destroyed on the quayside - all underlined the urgency of collecting the wounded and sailing quickly back to Britain.

Our ship was equipped to take 50 bed cases and 200 walking-wounded, and we had practised a more or less smooth routine during the period of We were now awaiting a second the "phoney war." We had nearly completed loading the main body of casualties, and in the partial luli I noticed a grey figure in a broad-brimmed hat detach himself from the group and approach the Senior Transport Officer. There was a brief conversation, a negative motioning of the hands by the S.T.O., and the man dejectedly rejoined his party. He had clearly asked for help for all of them to get away from this hell, and the request was clearly refused. It was indeed, illegal for a hospital ship to do such a thing.

WASHINGTON (Offis). -U.S. Supreme Court has a a way of occasionally reaffirming with dramatic force the basic principles of the American Constitution. It has done so now by sweeping aside all Administration arguments in deciding that there has to be judicial restriction on the Federal Government's use of electronic surveillance against suspected "subversives."

The unanimity of this decision and the stern lecture on the limits of Federal executive power that accompanied it were, however, something of a surprise,

President Richard Nixon has appointed four of the nine members of the Court. He has made it clear that he is deliberately seeking to shift its balance towards a more conservative interpretation of the Constitution, and it is generally agreed that he has already succeeded. Sir Seretse Khama, with a pair of diamond cuff-links to commemorate the opening of the new mine there, now called Orapa after a small cattle post nearby. If you can get the Kalahari sanddust out of your eyes, you will soon discover that the new mine will be just about the brightest and biggest jewel in the De Beers firmament. In its first full year, Orapa will produce 2.4 million carats of diamonds. In 1971 the whole of South African production was not more than 6.8 million carats.

De Beers began the search in the Tuli block of eastern Botswana in April, 1955, gradually moving southward through the Gaborone and Lo-batse blocks. Nothing was found, so attention was directed still farther south, and across the Kalahari De-sert to the Ghanzi district of western Botswana.

No luck

No luck, so in September, 1961, the geologists moved to the Kgat-leng district between the Tuli and

A new diamond mine was opened at Orapa, Botswana, recently which, in its first full year, will produce the equivalent of more than a third of the whole of the South African production for 1971. Here is the story of the 12-year search for diamonds which ended at Orapa.

thoughts to the Motloutse diamonds. The finding of their source became an obsession. Detailed prospecting of the river up to its headwaters which had long been dry - was resumed. But no kimberlitic minerals were found.

What they did find were traces of a large and shallow valley, cut evidently by an ancient river, beyond the headwaters of the Motloutse. In trying to explain his anomaly, De Beers' chief geologist in Bots Dr. Gavin Lamont, recalled a theory to the effect that millions of years ago there had occurred an extensive upward warping of the earth's crust along a line extending from Rhodesia well into Botswana. If that were so, Dr. Lamont reasoned, the real source of the Motloutse could have been far to the west of the upwarp, and the diamonds found to the east of it at Foley could have been washed down by the river long before the upwarp occurred and cut off its flow.

Much tested

To test his hunch, Dr. Lamont carried out an extensive and detailed sampling of the area to the west. The results were disappointing, revealing an inconclusive scattering of kimberlitic minerals. Was the upwarp theory wrong?

To test it once more De Beers decided on a rapid reconnaissance of an area much farther west, between Letlhakane and Mopipi. This time the geologists found abundant evidence of ilmenites and garnets of kimberlitic quality — the two chief indicators of diamond. It was now

'Do-gooder' exonerated in court

 A Magistrate's Court judge here yesterday rap-ped the police for "making a mountain out of a molehill" in bringing to trial a man who was accused of removing a pre-historic find from the Golan

The accused, Yoav Sharon, of Ashdot Ya'acov (Ihud), was serving in the reserves last July on the Golan Heights. At the village of Sloukiye, he found a stone eltar dating back to the Calcolithic Period. He took the stone home with him for safekeeping, and notified the local representative of the Antiquities Department.

The police charged Mr. Sha ron with taking unlawful pos-session of the stone and, failing to report his find

The Judge commended Mr. Sharon for his action, saying that he had probably rescued the artifact from destruction or oblivion. Mr. Sharon was fined Hil on the technical charge of removing the stone.

Matric exam Knesset go-ahead theft proves to increase 'a rumour' local rates

Ministry of Education officials have found no evidence that matriculation examination papers (bagrut) were stolen from school offices and sold to 12th-grade students sitting for their exams now, The Ministry spokesman said yesterday that no changes in examination schedules are considered and that officials continue to have full faith in the soundness of their arrangements.

An investigation that outsiders are capitalizing on examination time to sell phony lists of questions has not so far turned up a single specimen of such lists. "The matter would certainly be handed over to the police if a single shred of evidence were found," the spokesman said.

Arab youth held in rape of U.S. girl, 19

The Jerusalem Police yesterday arrested a 15-year-old boy from Azartya village, east of Jerusalem, on suspicion of raping an American girl volunteer.

The girl, 19, complained to the police yesterday morning that she and her 17-year-old Israeli boy companion had made the acquaintance of two young Arabs in the Old City. They accepted the Arabe' in-vitation to spend the night in their home in Azariya. When they arrived at the "home," they found it was a deserted building.

Their suspicions aroused, the couple decided to return to Jerusalem. The Arab boys escorted them and, on the way, knocked the Israeli unconscious with a rock and raped the girl. The Israeli later recovered and alerted the police.
